"Your child's success or lack of success in sports does not indicate what kind of parent you are. But having an athlete that is coachable, respectful, a great teammate, mentally tough, resilient and tries their best IS a direct reflection of your parenting."

BOOK CLUB

The Gift of Failure
by Jessica Lahey

Chapter 9 of The Gift of Failure by Jessica Lahey, titled "How to Build a Better Relationship with Your Child," focuses on the importance of fostering a strong, supportive relationship between parents and children to promote growth and learning. Lahey argues that open communication and trust are vital for helping children navigate challenges and failures. By developing a relationship based on mutual respect and understanding, parents can create a safe space where children feel empowered to make mistakes, learn from them, and grow. Lahey emphasizes the importance of listening to children, acknowledging their emotions, and offering guidance without taking over or solving their problems. This approach encourages children to take ownership of their actions and develop problem-solving skills. The chapter underscores the idea that a healthy parent-child relationship fosters resilience and independence, allowing children to thrive in the face of challenges and setbacks.

FROM THE VAULT

Why do we pay so much money for our kids to do all their sports? I have a confession to make; I don't pay for my kids to do sports. Personally, I couldn't care less about what sport they do. So, if I am not paying for sports what am I paying for?

I pay for the opportunity my kids have and will have to make lifelong friendships, create lifelong memories, and to be as proud of the achievements as I am.
