New Business

- Cody Billings provides an overview of Team Genius, a tryout evaluation software widely used by sports organizations in the U.S. and Canada, notably in Minnesota.
  - Team Genius allows associations to form teams at various levels (AAA, AA, single A), customize player evaluation criteria, and easily assign weights to different skills or metrics.
  - The system is flexible, supporting both quantitative and subjective scoring, and offers templates based on extensive data from many organizations.
  - Integration with Sports Engine streamlines player registration and check-in, and the mobile app simplifies the evaluation process for coaches.
  - Cody also addresses handling late or walk-in players and emphasizes the straightforward, customizable process for organizing tryouts. Later in the transcript, the discussion shifts to securing city approval for a project, focusing on logistics such as ladder use, weight limits, storage access, and necessary permissions, highlighting potential challenges and the need for formal procedures.
- The lift is intended for equipment, not people, as specified in the fine print, and supports up to 400 lbs.
  - The city may either be strict or quickly approve it—it's uncertain and the main concern is reliability and maintenance.
  - There will be follow up on parts, labor, and securing access. We really need the storage space, as it's currently challenging to move bins up there without significant effort.
